Product Description

The CACI Common Bench-top Automatic Test System (CBATS) testers are universal, full featured stand alone systems test products. The units are packaged in a small footprint and capable of supporting diagnostic and acceptance test requirements for a wide assortment of avionics instrumentation, flight computers, and other electronic assemblies with application for both civil and military aerospace vehicles.

The CBATS testers have been designed to allow customer specialization of end item testing with unique Test Program Set (TPS) products that would be independently developed for each specific end item Unit Under Test (UUT) application. While the CBATS tester system is common, each end item TPS has unique interface requirements as well as its own test procedures that require distinct software and interface cables, not to mention other unique physical interfaces that may have to be addressed as a part of the Test Program Set. The Test Program Set can be provided by the customer, developed by CACI or developed by other vendors based on the CBATS interface documentation.

There are two models of the CBATS testers (Model 101 and 201) currently fielded in various depot and back-shop environments and were selected based on the specific test requirements for the UUT.

The functional test capabilities of the two CBATS tester models are described in the following pages. Table 1 provides a list of features of the Model 101 and Model 201 CBATS testers.

Service/Support

Included Services

As a part of each product sale, CACI will provide technical support telephonically or by email as provided for below in the Points of Contact Section below for 60 days after delivery of a unit. This is intended primarily as a service to our customers to assist in resolving any issues with making the unit fully operational and ensure proper systems installations.

Delivery and Acceptance

CACI applies the following criteria for acceptance of the CBATS

CACI assumes appropriate facilities and customer furnished items as applicable will be available to support acceptance testing, including but not limited to, equipment required to calibrate the CBATS. Acceptance testing will be completed by the customer upon receipt of the test system and includes the following criteria –

- Successful inventory of all items
- Inspection of all items to ensure no external shipping damage occurred
- Successful execution of system self-test software
- Successful calibration of the test system

CBATS pricing described below include delivery to a CONUS location only.

CACI will determine the most efficient means of delivering systems to their acceptance destination.

Standard delivery times will vary based on the contents of each order; however, typical delivery times are 16 weeks after receipt of order for four units or less. Estimates for delivery time for more than four units will be provided upon request.

Unless otherwise mutually agreed to between the customer and the contractor in writing and incorporated in a purchase order agreement, orders canceled within 14 days ARO shall be subject to a cancellation fee of 10% of the total order value. Orders canceled following 14 days ARO shall be subject to a cancellation and re-stocking/handling fee of 40% of the total order value, or 40% of the portion of the order canceled.
