Environmental Planning Services and Documentation rely on spatial and attribute information provided by GIS services in such sub-SINs as represented by the Endangered Species and/or Wetlands Analysis examples of the solicitation.

SIN (899-1): Environmental Planning Services & Documentation

Remote sensing analysis, air photo interpretation, and field study-based classification, ecological modeling, change detection and GIS data mapping methodologies are applied in:

Land Cover/Use Inventories

Environmental Impact Assessments

Land Capability Studies	Endangered Species and/Wetlands Analysis
Facility Site Selection	Infrastructure Planning
Regional Ecological Characterization	Coastal Zone Management
Watershed Characterization	Environmental Engineering
Forest, Range and Wetland Mapping	Urban and Regional Planning
Agricultural Suitability and Potential	Emergency Response Planning
Agriculture Production Monitoring	Ecological Monitoring
Environmental Baseline Studies	Water Resource Mapping and Protection

SIN (899-7): Geographic Information Systems (GIS)

Services range from plotting and laminating of client supplied data to regional environmental baseline studies, natural resource planning, and natural hazard risk analyses that may call for multiple thematic layers, including elevation, slope, aspect, soils, wells, springs, and aquifers; temperature and rainfall; developed areas; population/housing, land use/landcover; surface materials, configuration, and drainage; transportation and utilities; office, industry and storage facilities; and administrative boundaries.

Technical Services

- data compilation
- database design
- digitizing
- raster-to-vector conversion
- meta-data documentation
- address geocoding
- modeling
- analysis
- cartographic design
- hardcopy color plotting

Project Services

Tasks normally included in an MDA GIS mapping, database and database management project include the development of:

- database inventories
- database management system
- data dictionary
- production methodology
- project quality control procedures
- cartographic base maps
- thematic data layers

- analysis and modeling
- deliverable product formats and media
